What's the difference between ...

PMI

The largest PM Body in the world, the certification is purely knowledge based through exams, showing a candidate's knowledge at the time of the exam, internationally recognised

AIPM

The largest PM community in the APAC region, the certification is truly competency based through demonstrated workplace evidence, soon to be internationally recognised through IPMA membership

What's the difference between ...

Certification

Used by professional institutes to recognise individuals who have attained a professional Standard

Qualification

A formal level of educational attainment, as determined by a University, TAFE, Registered Training Organisation etc.

Certification Program - RegPM

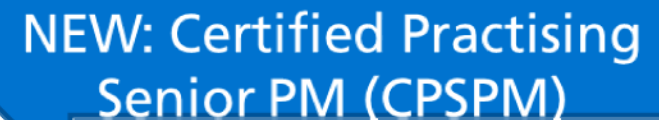

It is currently awarded at one of three levels :

Certified Practising Project Practitioner (CPPP)

Supports, assists or contributes to a project

Certified Practising Project Manager (CPPM)

Plans and manages a project

NEW: Certified Practising
Senior PM (CPSPM)

Certified Practising Project Director (CPPD)

Director/Program Manager directs

Focused on integration of multiple projects

NEW: Certified Practising
Project Executive (CPPE)

Benefits of RegPM certification

It is competency based and shows what a candidate can do, rather than knows at the time of an exam

Personal, face to face, at least in the beginning

Produces an individual professional development plan

Provides a career path

It is non-threatening for people with exam phobia

How to keep certification current?

Establishing a cross-division project management community

Establishing a cross-division mentoring scheme

Nominating for a Project Management Achievement Award

Volunteering PM services to a community project

Participating in a professionalisation program
